

Celebration

Most businesses endeavor to succeed and make a profit. The same with individuals who seek success and wealth. Generally, when success arrives, some form of celebration honors the event. Everyone loves to party. It's a time to be free and get outside of the box.

One can conclude that a celebration is a social event. It's a statement of achievement surrounded by joy. Celebration is good for the heart, mind and soul. And, it's good for the organization as well. Within the business setting, in the midst of hard work and performance goals, celebrating an event takes the edge off the day to day routines. It communicates the message that good merits are recognized and may earn rewards. It also sends a message that the organization cares.

We should all get into the habit of celebrating our achievements no matter if it's a simple event or a major accomplishment. The fact that a celebration is a recognition and earns respect should be considered valuable. It is a declaration. In the business environment, celebrations serve to motivate the team, relate appreciation and show congratulations. But most important, it's a time when the minds and hearts of those involved demonstrate a sincere desire to unify and show solidarity.

The "Higher" side to celebration reinforces gratitude for the creations that are forthcoming. Planting good and beautiful seeds for the future are equally, if not, more important than putting emphasis on the past. And a celebration does exactly that. It signifies that there are more opportunities ahead for all.

By Robert V. Gerard

This article is copyrighted.

You have permission to share it through any medium provided the following is included:

"This article is copyrighted. Copyright@2018-2019 Dr. Robert V. Gerard,
Phone 607-724-2438; web www.oughten-house.com/oughtenstore/
E-mail contact@oughtenhouse.com."